POSTSCRIPTUM

Born in a country parsonage I, until my twelfth year, associated much with peasants, and listened with attentive interest to their legends and stories. Amongst these there were two especially which made a strong impression upon my childish mind:

One was the legend of the sunken church lying at the bottom of the lake where it might be seen deep down in the water when it was clear and calm, and whose bells might still be heard ringing in the stillness of the evening; the other was the story of the treasure-seeker who at sunset, in perfect silence, without uttering a word, sought to bring the long buried treasure up to the surface.

I also laboured and strove for years digging silently, until I could bring the treasure forth to the light of day. Here we have it! But it has long lain hidden and may require a little furbishing in coming times, before it can shine in all its glory.

What induced me with eagerness to begin to work at the Jātaka Book was particularly three utterances I met with: The first I found in Spence Hardy's Manual of Buddhism. p. 1, viz. „The Singhalese will listen the night through to recitations from this work without any apparent weariness. and a great number of the Jātakas are familiar even to the women“. The second I read in Clough's Singhalese Dictionary under the word Jātakapota where it says „this book is so sacred amongst the Buddhists that they will offer to it and worship it“ And the third I noticed in the Ceylon Friend 1837 where it says „The more I think of Buddha, the more I love him“ When we have read the Jātaka through no one will wonder at these sentiments

In 1849 I had already commenced transcribing parts of the Jataka, but I did not seriously take it up until I had finished my edition of the Dhammapada in 1855 The further I got into the book, the clearer I saw its importance, not only in a linguistic sense but also from a culture historical point of view, and in order to awaken interest for it in the literary world I began publishing specimens of it in 1861 Professor Westergaard was not at first in favour of a complete edition, he would have preferred an analysis only Perhaps he thought the undertaking beyond my abilities Later on he altered his opinion and supported the work It was however principally the encouragement I, from the very beginning, received from Professor A Weber that kept up my courage And when material failed me it was especially the Rev Subhuti's untiring perseverance in sending me a paper transcript in parts and Colonel Duncan's splendid present of a complete Burmese copy of the Jataka (at the instigation of Missionary C H Chard) that made it possible for me to finish my undertaking

I now trust that the fact will not be overlooked, that I have had but little material to work from, also that when I began the study of Pali the language was nearly uncultivated I therefore venture to hope for a mild criticism of this my work

I As is well known a „Jātaka“ in the Jātaka Attha vānnaṇā consists of four parts, viz (see Jāt I 11^a) a) a Paccuppanna-vaiṭṭhu, an incident from the time of the Gotama Buddha that frames, as it were and gives rise to Gotama Buddha telling an event of olden times, b) an Attita vatthu which latter has originally been in verse, but afterwards been retold by G. B. partly in prose and partly in verse, with moral teaching in view. c) (J. I $\frac{411}{1}$) a Veyyākaraṇa or Commentary which elucidates both the tale and certain words in the metrical pieces, and ultimately d) a Samodhāna, a winding up of the story. The two last belong properly to the Paccuppannavatthu.

In the Paccuppannavatthu a number of books are quoted appertaining to the Tipiṭaka, it consequently belongs to the period following the Buddhistic canon's genesis, and is therefore doubtless an utterance of clerical tradition. The P. V. ends in J. 1—13 with „pākaṭam akāsi“, but in all the others with „atītam āhari“ (cfr. I. $\frac{124}{1}$). That the Nidānakathā is a part of the P. V., we must conclude, as it appears, from I $\frac{127}{16}$, and that the P. V. belongs to the Aṭṭhakathā (i. e. the Jātakatṭhakathā I $\frac{62}{20}$) may be seen from the postscript of J. 77 which runs as follows:

„Parinibbuto pana Bhagavati usabhā-rukkhādīni tīṇi padāni Aṭṭhakathaṃ āropetvā lābūnīti ādīni pañca (for pañca read ca) padāni ekaṃ gāthaṃ katvā Ekanipātapāliṃ āropesunti“, i. e.

„When Bhagavat was dead the Council-holders put the three padas usabhā-rukkhā etc. into the Aṭṭhakathā (see p. 336), and made lāpūni and the other padas into one gāthā and put it into the verses (Pāli) of the Ekanipāta.“

So the Aṭṭhakathā and its translation into Pāli (Jātakassa Atthavaṇṇanā) begin with: Sā pañāyaṃ Jātakassa Atthavaṇṇanā, see vol. I p. 2.

As a contrast to Aṭṭhakathā, Pāli is often mentioned by which is understood the verses both in the present Jātaka and in the Singhalese Aṭṭhakathā on which it is founded. Thus when it is said in J. I $\frac{488}{28}$: pāliyaṃ pana phalaṃ pāpetīti likhanti taṃ vyañjanaṃ Aṭṭhakathāya n' atthi, we must by this understand „in the verses (pāli) of the Aṭṭhakathā“, likewise in II $\frac{241}{17}$ $\frac{242}{4}$, VI $\frac{36}{26}$ $\frac{276}{29}$; sometimes Potthakā (IV $\frac{223}{22}$ V $\frac{25}{6}$) and Pālipotthakā (VI $\frac{343}{17}$) are used, as it seems, with the same meaning as Pāli.

In the Atitavatthu we have the oldest element of the Jātaka. The tale of the A V, is founded on an ancient story, originally composed in verse, from which Gotama Buddha quotes sometimes single verses sometimes more. We have here an entire parallel to many of the Icelandic Saga works which are also built up on the old lays of the Bards. That G B himself is not the author of these verses, is most clearly seen from the later Jātakas, the verses of which in many places say the same as has just been told in prose. It would indeed be ridiculous to suppose that G B should have exerted himself to express in poetry and even in old language what he had just said in prose. No he only affirms what he has said in prose by quotations from the poem on which his tale is founded. In many instances he does not even convert the old song into prose, but lets the tale go on in the very words of the song, only now and then putting in some explanatory remarks see f ex II $\frac{387}{910}$, III 839, IV 804, V 14 VI $\frac{188}{1929}$ 220, 28 221, 19 485, 19 12, 513 17 26 348, 1 10, 557 2 8 etc. Compare this with what I have said in my edition of the Sutta Nipata p VII—VIII. It is also worth noticing certain recurring phrases which seem to point to our having here before us fragments of old popular epic poetry, f ex. kacci vo kusalam VI $\frac{264}{11}$ $\frac{232}{14}$ cfr Mahabharata (Calcutta edition) XII 13727, see further VI $\frac{22}{14}$ foll $\frac{42}{13}$ $\frac{46}{22}$ $\frac{54}{27}$ $\frac{272}{2}$ $\frac{272}{27}$ $\frac{268}{1}$, V $\frac{256}{26}$ $\frac{222}{19}$ VI $\frac{22}{2}$.

That the Atitavatthu is the oldest part of the Jātaka may be clearly seen from the language of the Pālī Verses, as in these we find many peculiarities, especially old forms which do not occur in the prosaic Pālī, and some of which point to the north west of India they being found in the Vedas. A few of them are due to the metre. I shall make a note of the following

That is to say The tales of the Atthavattu play mostly in the northern and western part of India, and the tales of the Paccuppannavattu principally in the eastern India. In other words the Atthavattu is the oldest element of the Jataka. This seems especially to be evident from the tales in which the Takkasilā is mentioned as a University town to which young men resorted from Bāranaśī and other easterly cities to study the three Vedas and acquire every sort of accomplishment under the guidance of a renowned master. (See the Index under Takkasilā)

The Paccuppannavattu and the Atthavattu together with the Vevyākarana and the Samodhāna then make up the Jataka-Atthakathā (I 32) that was translated into Singhalese with the exception of the verses which were left in the original Pāli, and this Singhalese Jātaka Atthakathā has later been retranslated into Pāli under the name of Jātakassa Atthavannanā or Jātakass' Atthavannana (see I 36 f, VI 30, V 11) which is the Jataka that now lies before us and begins at page 2 of the first volume.

That the prosaic part of the Atthavattu belongs to the old Jataka is quite clear from the fact that the verses would be thoroughly unintelligible without it.

It may be doubted whether the Introductory Verses at p. 1, although they are to be found both in C and B, originally belong to the Jātakassa Atthavannanā, as they do not appear in S which has quite a different Introduction (see vol IV) and only agrees with C and B from the beginning of p. 2. Sa paṇayam Jātakassa Atthavannana. If we suppose that they are part of the J. A. then the author of it has been called upon by three persons viz. Atthadassin, Buddhamitta and Buddhadeva to write it.

II But who is the Author? To be sure, we are told by the writer of the Gantha Vamsa (see Journal of the P. T. Soc. 1886 p. 59) that Buddhaghosa is the author but on this you can scarcely rely. It is certain that Buddhaghosa has written Visuddhimagga, Sumangalavilasini, Papaṇcasudani, Sa ratthappakāsini, Manorathapūraṇī and Samantapāsādikā, for this clearly appears from the Introductory Verses to these commentaries, but that he, besides these voluminous works, should have written six others equally large whose author he is supposed to be, is very incredible, especially if he only stayed three years in Ceylon, and was not barely a translator, but an independent writer.

Further, it is not granted either, that the Buddhāmitta who is spoken of in the Introductory Verses of the Jātaka-Atthavannanā, is the same with the one that is mentioned in the Samantapāsādikā and the Papañcasūdanī, this one being more likely to be identical with the Buddhāmitta that, according to Vasilief's Bouddhisme p. 218 lived „vers la neuf-centième année après la mort de Bouddha“ and consequently was a contemporary of Buddhaghosa. This last mentioned Buddhāmitta, further, may be the same with the one who is mentioned as having, in the time of Kumāragupta. Samvat 126 erected a Statue of Buddha. (Cfr. Westergaard's Indiske Kejserbuse p. 108, and A. Cunningham's Archæol. Survey of India X p. 7).

III. That the original Pāli Aṭṭhakathā (see Index) Jātaka-Aṭṭhakathā (I ⁶²/₂₀) which was translated into Singhalese, already has existed as a Book at the time when the Saṅgītikārakas made the above-mentioned transposition (see supra p. III) seems evident.

IV. The now existing Jātakasā Atthavannanā presents itself partly as a recast of the Jātaka-Aṭṭhakathā, an earlier arrangement of the stuff being kept formally but having in reality been altered, while several, formerly independent, Jātakas have been incorporated in others. We find namely that 12 (110. 111. 112. 170. 192. 350. 364 452. 471. 500. 508. 517.) from their original place have been transferred to 546 Mahā-Ummagga-, 2 (341. 464) to 536 Kuṇāla-, 1 (441) to 516 Vi-dhura-, and 1 (470) to 535 Sudhābhojana-; consequently, when we subtract these 16 from the current statement of 550, we only get 534, but formally there are 547 according to the older redaction. In this both C and B agree. It would be of interest to learn what position the Siamese Jātaka holds in regard to

C and B, if, on the whole, a complete copy nowadays exists in Siam

V The Buddhist Canon is mentioned in the Jataka under three names Tīṇi Piṭakāni, Piṭakattaya and Tepiṭaka Buddhivacana (see for these names the Index)

And if we can depend upon the statement in J II $\frac{210}{14}$ of the following import

„Tada kira paucasata brāhmaṇa tinnam vedanam pāragu saṇe pubbayitvā Tīṇi Piṭakāni ugganhitva mānamadamatta hutva ‘Sammāsambuddho pi Tīn’ eva Piṭakāni janatī mayam pi tāni janāma, evam sante kim taesa imbehi nānakaranan’ ti Buddhupatthānam na gacchanti : e

„At that time five hundred Brāhmanas who where perfect in the three Vedas, and had embraced the doctrine (of the Buddha) and acquired the three Piṭakas were seized with the madness of pride and said „Sammāsambuddha, to be sure knows the three Piṭakas, but we too know them, in what then consists the difference between him and us“, so thinking they do not go and serve Buddha, then the Tipitaka must have existed at the time of Gotama Buddha, and G B would consequently, like his antagonist Devadatta (II $\frac{210}{14}$), have been Tipitaka dhara, one who knows the three Piṭakas Compare with this J I ($\frac{210}{14}$), II $\frac{210}{14}$ „avuso Devadatta, Sammāsambuddho tuyham acariyo tvam S-sambuddham nissaya Tīṇi Piṭakāni ugganhi“, and the beginning of the Commentary to Dhammapada vv 19—20 Bahum pi ce ti Imam dhammadesanam Sattha Jetavane viharanto dve sahayake arabbha kathesi Sāvattihissino hi dve kulaputtā nam sabbāya (pabāya?) vibharam gantvā Satthu dhammadesanam sutva kame palāya sāsane uṇam dāva pabbajitā pancavassāni icariyaupajjhāyanam santiko vasitvā Satthūram upasamkamitva saṇe dhuram pucchitva vipassanādhuram ca ganthadhuraṇi ca vittharato sutva eko tava „aham bhanto mahallakakale pabbajito na sakkhisse imā ganthadhuram pūretum vipassanādhuram pana pūressamiti“ yāva arabhattā vipassanam kathaṇetva glāntento vajjananto saba patirambhidāhi arahattam pipunī, itaro „aham ganthadhuraṃ pūressāmiti" anukkamena Tepiṭakam Buddhavacanāṃ uggāḥitvā gatagataṭṭhāno dhammam kathesi ... „kiṃ pana tumhehi tassa santike gahitaṃ, kiṃ Diḡhanikāyādīsu aññataro nikāyo, Tīsu Piṭakesu ekaṃ piṭakan" ti vatvā catuppadikam pi gātham na jānāti etc. Mark further Alwis' quotation from Vibhanga ātuvā in his Introd. to Kachchāyana's Grammar p. V: Sammāsambuddho pi tepiṭakan Buddhavachanan Tanti āropento Māgadhihāṇyeva āropesi 'Buddha who rendered his (?) tepiṭaka words into Tanti (or tantra or doctrines) did so by means of the Māgadhi language'.

That the Tipiṭaka has existed before Gotama Buddha, even long before at the time of Koṇḍañña-Buddha, would also result from the Nidānakathā I $\frac{20}{10}$, where we are told that the king Vijitūvin mastered the three Piṭakas; likewise from I $\frac{41}{5}$ $\frac{4}{5}$ and IV $\frac{27}{7}$. So it will be understood how we already in the Atītavatthu (II $\frac{147}{2}$) occasionally meet with the formula: appamāno Buddhō, appamāno Dhammo, appamāno Saṃgho, this Buddha being of course the Buddha of the time and not Gotama Buddha.

And perhaps in time we may find out that several of the anterior, so-called mythical, Buddhas have been real historical persons; one of them at least has proved to be so, since a stūpa was erected to him, and Asoka worshipped before it and restored it. (See Bühler in the Academy 1895. 27. April p. 360). On the whole, I think we must admit that such a complicated system as that of Gotama Buddha's is scarcely one man's work, but must indeed have had its fore-runners. And that a large old poetic literature in Pāli has existed before Gotama Buddha is proved by the many identical fragments of verses that recur in different Jātakas, in fact in all Pāli books, and seem to have been common property at the time; compare below Dr. Andersen's List of Parallel Verses.

VI. In the Jātaka to write is called likh. Lekha means a streak, a line, writing, and the Indians wrote on a paṇṇa or a paṭṭa. An epistle is called paṇṇa, and a letter akkhara. Examples: imaṃ gātham paṇṇe likhitvā II $\frac{174}{23}$; IV $\frac{55}{17}$; tena hi likhathā ti suvaṇṇapaṭṭe likhāpesi II $\frac{172}{22}$; IV $\frac{7}{26}$ $\frac{484}{17}$: jātibhī-gulakena bhṛṭṭiya akkharani lihitva V $\frac{116}{9}$ $\frac{427}{24}$ IV $\frac{211}{20}$, pannā kareṇa saddhīm pannaṇi pahinimsu V $\frac{452}{14}$ pāsane lekham kha nanto V $\frac{142}{13}$ $\frac{116}{9}$ $\frac{427}{24}$

Lipi that appears in the Inscriptions of Asoka is not to be found in the Jātaka and is no doubt a loan from the Persians

I cannot conclude this Postscriptum without especially thanking the Berlin Academy of Sciences for its repeated liberality in granting a sum towards the printing of this last volume of the Jātaka

Finally I have to thank Mr P O Madsen, the compositor for the care and attention with which he for the space of twenty years has worked at this not very easy task

PREFACE.

On beginning this Index to the Jātaka, four years ago, it was first my intention to give an index of both names and matter. But I have altered this plan since the appearance of the English translation published by Prof. Cowell. In this translation we have not only a short account of the contents of the tales, but a complete index has been held in prospect, when the work is finished. I have therefore particularly confined my work to proper names and Gāthās. In reality I think that indexes to proper names and verses in Pāli literature are at present of much greater consequence than a new Pāli Dictionary. Prof. E. Müller's Index of proper names published in J. P. T. S. is, it is true, of great importance, and I have myself derived much benefit from it, but it is clear that after a space of nine years it cannot longer be satisfactory. I therefore hope that the present index will be a considerable step forward. My plan has been to collect all places where the names occur. How far I have been fortunate in this respect, the use of the book will show. The names are arranged alphabetically according to the Pāli Alphabet, and the words of the text itself are everywhere, as far as possible, employed in the explanations; my own additions are marked (—). The index refers to the six volumes marked I—VI, and each place is indicated page and line. Only quotations from Nidānakathā are separately designated by the letter X. In accordance with the now published edition I have tried to introduce a further denotation as to whether the quotations are from the Jātaka-text itself, from the frame story, or the commentary, whereas the quotations from the commentary are marked with (—) enclosing the number of line, whilst quotations from the principal text are marked with *. I admit that it would have been of interest to have had a special mark for all quotations from the verses, but the fear of making the whole too complicated has prevented me doing so. Beside the proper names are added all names of tales¹⁾ or portions of the work and titles of other Pāli works quoted. Amongst the number of references to passages in the Jātaka itself, many of course are incorrect, in such cases I have exerted myself to point out the one really meant. I will here merely give an example. Vol. IV 360²⁴ we have the following quotation „Atthanipāṭe Sucirajātaka“. There is however no tale with this title in the whole Jātaka. The only way of finding out what is referred to is the word „asaddisa danam“, which shortly mentions the subject of the introductory tale. Thereby is found in Atthanipāṭe Adittajātaka, and attention is directed besides to Jāt (499), where it is clear the same quotation appears again in the form of „Atthanipāṭe Sovirajātaka“. Neither is there any Sovirajātaka, but when one gets accustomed to the different ways in which the tales have come by their names in the last redaction of the text, it is easy to be seen that the name Sovirajātaka must be the right reading as Ādittajātaka begins just with the words „atthi Soviraratthe“. Sucira must therefore be a miscript for Sovira. Vidūra-jāt (Cod. B) is doubtless Vidhura-jāt or another name for Dhuma-karijāt (413). Here is consequently a confounding of the Atthavattthu and the Paccuppannavattthu. On the other hand the Birman variation of Sovira IV 401 is Sivira (cfr. III 470 Sivirathe B), which also implies that Sucira is a perversion.

The importance of having the words of the Paccuppannavattthu, pointing out the subject of the tale, included in the index may thus be seen, I have therefore unhesitatingly introduced them in alphabetical order with the proper names, for it is practical to have as much as possible in one list, and several of them are proper names.

The titles of the stories are in most cases formed in either of the following ways: 1) the Jātaka is called after the hero, generally Bodhisatta, but also sometimes after some other person taking part in the tale, 2) the title can be formed according to the first Gāthā, but in certain cases after the prose beginning. The same methods may be seen in the titles of the Jātakas that are preserved in the Bharhut-Inscriptions. For instance that Mahāummagga-jātaka is called Yavamajhakiyaṃ, agrees very well with our text, that VI 331,1 is as follows: „Mithilāyaṃ . . . pācīnayavamajjhake Sirivaḍḍhako nāma seṭṭhi ahoṣi“. Ruru-jāt. is named after Bo. in the text, but on the Stūpa we find Miga-jāt. after the first Gāthā. Jāt. (62) is, as we know, likewise named on the Stūpa after the opening words in the first Gāthā: yaṃ brāhmaṇo etc. Nacca-jāt. is named after an important occurrence in the tale (the peacock's dance), but the Stūpa has Hamsa-jāt. after Bo. At the beginning of Bhallāṭiya-jāt. (504) prose and verse are much the same: Bhallāṭiyo nāma ahoṣi rājā; the Stūpa here has Kinnara-jāt. This seems to infer that we cannot from the titles draw any direct conclusion as to the original form of the tales. I do not think it right to assert, that the Jātakas have originally only existed in metre. As these tales have been represented at an early period under the form of reliefs, they must have been widely circulated and well known, and have doubtless also been early narrated in prose. That great parts of the present redaction are selected from longer poems in narrative style, there is little reason to doubt, but at the time they were first related as Jātakas (i. e. stories of Buddha's earlier existences), they may very well have been somewhat in their present shape. For closer examination of such problems it is therefore of importance to have a list of all the verses that occur in more than one place. This I have striven to do in Index III, which not only contains an alphabetical list of the beginnings of those Gāthās that are to be found repeated in their entire length, but also several recurring parts of Gathās, as far as I can make out¹⁾ Prof Franke's opinion²⁾ of the verses in the Jāt seems to be confirmed here in several points. A good example of this is given in the verses in Jāt (262) and (263) which we find in succession vol IV 471 (cfr V 451). Still I do not think that we can safely admit a poetical „Ur Jātaka“, even if we allow that the prose in the Attavavattu on the whole shews evidence of editorship. I shall not however enter closer into the question here, what has been most important to me was that this index should follow as quickly as possible on the completion of the text, and I hope it may deserve some appreciation and a lenient criticism of its deficiencies that it is now, in less than a year's time, presented to the public. One result of the hasty preparation for which I beg indulgence, is the rather long list of additions and corrections.

In reference to Index I I would further remark that as it first of all is an index to the present edition, I have, from principle not voluntarily corrected the text which is given by the editor, the corrections I have ventured to make are therefore few. I here mention a couple of examples of incorrect names. Vol IV 343 speaks of two Theras Mantidatta and Dhannuggahatissa. These names can be shortened to Datta and Tissa, which may be seen from II 403, where the same tale occurs, but instead of Datta the Singhalese text has Uttā. This last mentioned name is undoubtedly false, as B has the form Datta³⁾ and the signs for „u“ and „da“, in Singhalese might easily be mistaken. In accordance with this I have also understood „mitta“ and „datto“ IV 478 27 as proper names of undefined persons. I avail myself of the opportunity here offered, of correcting a mistake which unfortunately has crept into Chalmer's translation of Vol I p 230. The Pāli Text (Jāt I 391 21) has the following >Sariputtatthero Nalagāmake jato varake pari

nibbāyi“, which is rendered: „The Elder S., who was born in Nāla village, died at Varaka“. Here, a town of the name of Varaka figures, but it is a delusion. The mistake is brought about through an insignificant misprint: it ought to be „jāto-varake“, as in V 125.21 where the same passage occurs. The word is formed of jāta + ovaraka (birth-room, cfr. jāta-bhūmi), and the passage is to be translated thus: „S. died in Nālagāma in the same room. he was born in“.

Of deviating readings I have taken several, as far as they appeared to me to be of importance, particularly the more uncommon names. On the other hand I have left out the number of epithets Bodhisatta, Mahāsatta, Tathāgatha etc., as they seem to me unnecessary; still I have in the article Bodhisatta given an alphabetical list of all his names and existences. I have adopted a simpler method with the names Bārāṇasī and Brahmadatta, merely mentioning vol. & page. In solitary cases (f. ex. Vedā) I have only selected a few places and notified this by adding „etc.“.

The editor has in many instances in the text and notes added parallels from other works (especially Dhammapada). These quotations are, although not exhaustive, still of great importance, and I have considered it useful to give a list of them in Index IV.

In conclusion I wish to thank Prof. Fausbøll, my teacher and guide of many years standing, in grateful acknowledgement of the aid he has rendered me throughout the whole of my work. Our deceased countryman V. Trenckner also deserves to be mentioned here: his copy of the printed text and his transcript have, in not a few places, been of much use to me.

I must address a special acknowledgement to the Directors of the Carlsberg Fund, who munificently, have granted me pecuniary support, which has enabled me to devote so much of my beforehand fully occupied time to this work.

Kopenhagen, May 1897.
